

Unique Wedding Invitations

By Denise Duncan

Wedding invitations come in many of various types of styles. Today couples tend to search for really unique wedding invitations. There is also an increasing number of wedding invitation designers who provide this service for those seeking the unique or non-traditional invitation.

Nevertheless, a couple can still have their own idea and concept on the design for their wedding invitation. The time to make a draft of a preliminary guest list is as soon as you have made a decision on when the wedding date is going to be.

Drafting up a plan as early as possible will enable you to know exactly how many people are going to attend this major event. And you can come up with a better plan for the things you would need. When deciding on wedding invitations you should know or have an idea of the type of design you want.

Some of the details of the wedding invitation include the type of envelope that will be used and the kind of print. It is good practice to have this done at least six months in advance of the wedding date. After you have gone to the printer to discuss the design and start the printing, it is important that you keep track of the time line. Send your wedding invitations to your guests at least 8 weeks before the said wedding date.

Sometimes the postal delivery might take up to 2 weeks. Every detail on your wedding invitations has to be not just nice, but very nice looking. Some common elements that are often used are Victorian style print or monograms. These create a sense of nobleness. Processes such as hot stamping, embossing, engraving and die-cutting can also be used. Some invitations use paper that has a sparkling effect.

Composing the patterns and the combination of different printing process described is the key to making this kind of wedding invitation look nice. The idea of using ready made concepts does not really mean that the invitation is not unique. The true meaning of ready made concepts is just picking up ideas and items that we see everyday and turning them to create the wedding invitation of your liking.

The wedding invitation is not just an invitation, it is a story of the couple as well. There are a lot of ready-made concepts couples can choose to make their own unique wedding invitations for their special day.

Denise Duncan has been involved in the wedding planning business for a number of years, and is an author and editor for My Wedding Information Website.

Source:www.isnare.com